Breaking News in Japan

The temperature in Tokyo went over 40°C for the first time in June. People are using their air conditioners more. Japan has asked people to use less electricity in the early evening hours. It wants people to turn off their lights from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m.

The heat wave will continue, and the rainy season is shorter than last year. This means the summer will be long and hot and there is a danger of heatstroke. The Japanese government has asked people to drink lots of water and not to exercise outside in the heat.

Having a good eating habit

Some people in Taiwan have trouble keeping fit. They usually get their favorite foods from restaurants or convenience stores. However, the food there is often full of calories. Having good eating habits helps us to stay healthy. What's more, doing exercise every day is important. Here are some tips for you to follow.

1. Have three meals a day, and no snacks between meals.
2. Drink at least 2,000 c.c. of water every day.
3. Have meat, vegetables and fruit in your diet. Stay away from fast food.
4. Don't be a couch potato. Try to spend more time doing outdoor activities, such as jogging, hiking, mountain climbing, biking and swimming.
5. Go to bed early. Don't stay up late. Resting your body makes you feel new the next morning.

How do seabirds share?

Most seabirds live in large groups with many different kinds of birds. This is safer than living alone because it keeps them safe from predators. But there's a problem, all the birds like to eat fish. If the seabirds want to live together without fighting, they have to share their food with others. Scientists study a seabird group with:

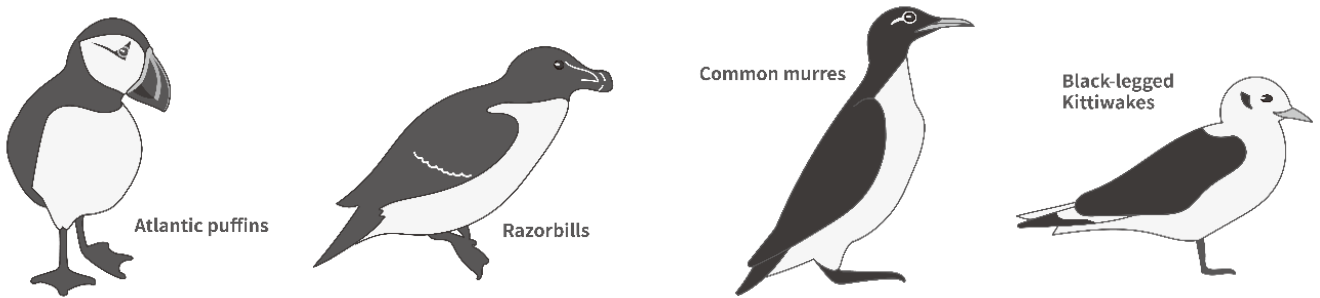

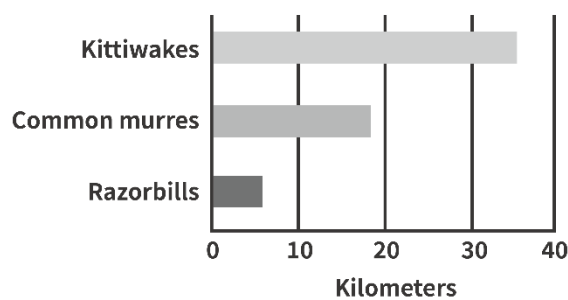

Figure 1

These four types of birds (see Figure 1) have the same in some places, but also different in some ways. Puffins, razorbills, and murre can dive. Kittiwakes can't, so they only catch fish swimming near water. Razorbills hunt close to their nests, but kittiwakes fly farther away to find food (see Figure 2). Murre can find bigger fish and eat different kinds of fish. This is because they can dive deeper than the other seabirds. At first the scientists thought they all ate the same fish and would get into fights over food. But the study shows they have small differences in their lifestyles meaning they can share the tasty fish. These differences make them live together without fighting for food (fish).
